Catalysis is the process of increasing the rate of a chemical reaction by adding a substance known as a catalyst (/ ˈkætəlɪs tɪˈtɪʃəl ˈkætəlɪst /), which is not consumed in the catalyzed reaction and can continue to act repeatedly. Because of this, only very small amounts of catalyst are required to alter the reaction rate in principle. In general, chemical reactions occur faster in the presence of a ...

Metals Platinum-group metals. Rhodium, the first metal to be used in a homogeneous asymmetric hydrogenation, continues to be widely used. Targets for asymmetric hydrogenation with rhodium generally require a coordinating group close to the olefin. While this requirement is a limitation, many classes of substrates possess such functionalization, e.g. unsaturated amides.

Carries water: Studies on water adsorption and transport on oxidized 2D carbon materials have attracted increasing interest owing to their applications in various research fields such as sensing, energy conversion, and membrane separation. Herein, the recent progress on water adsorption and transport on oxidized 2D carbon materials is reviewed, together with its application in proton ...

Chemistry - A European Journal: Early View

Metallocenophanes of p-block elements are somewhat unexplored compared to their transition metal analogues. A number of disila-bridged metallocenophanes with the group 14 elements silicon, germanium, tin, and lead, and the group 15 element antimony as central atoms were prepared and structurally characterized, expanding this little-explored class of compounds.
